Elbit's acquisition of Harris Corporation's night vision business is expected to moderately slow Elbit's coverage ratios, due to debt reducing steps taken by Elbit

Elbit Systems Ltd. ("the Company") (Midroog rating Aa1.il with a negative outlook), announced on April 5, 2019 the signing of a definitive agreement with Harris Corporation ("Harris"), a U.S. defense company, under which the Company's U.S. subsidiary Elbit Systems of America, LLC will acquire Harris' night vision business ("HNV") for US$350 million in cash. HNV's center of activities is the night vision systems manufacturing facility in Virginia, USA, which is considered one of the world leaders in its field and having strategic importance to the US armed forces. The background to the sale of HNV by Harris is anti-trust considerations since Harris intends to merge with L3 Technologies, a U.S. defense company, which is also a significant actor in the field of night vision systems.

Midroog regards the Company's successful track record with major M&A's in the past as a positive in this context, and estimates that possession of a strategic plant in North America would contribute to the Company's positioning vis-a-vis the U.S. defense market, which is the largest defense market globally and a strategic one for the Company, and would also further the Company's product's ability to penetrate the U.S. defense market. Furthermore, the acquisition may potentially allow for the development of new night vision products based upon the combined technologies of HNV and Elbit. However, Midroog does not assume significant synergies between HNV and Elbit in the short term, and we regard the deal's purchase multiple as relatively high, even though the transaction embeds long-term strategic advantages which may be provided to the Company.

Midroog estimates that the deal's net effect is expected to moderately slow the Company's coverage ratios, due to debt reducing steps taken by the Company including recent sale of Company shares for gross proceeds of approximately USD 186 million.

During January 2019, Midroog set the rating outlook for the Company to negative due to expected erosion in the Company's debt coverage ratios due to a significant increase in the Company's debt following the acquisition of Israel Military Industries ("IMI"). According to Midroog's base case, following the IMI acquisition, the Company's consolidated debt coverage ratios were expected to slow to approximately 3.0X adjusted financial debt to EBITDA and 3.6X adjusted financial debt to FFO, compared to 1.8X and 2.3X as of September 30, 2018, prior to the IMI acquisition. We believe that the HNV acquisition will not cause a significant deviation from the ranges of coverage ratios which have been taken into account within Midroog's base case, even though we did not estimate that a deal of this scale would take place, due to the recent sale of shares and other leverage reducing steps. Midroog will continue to examine the implications of the HNV and IMI acquisitions for the Company's cash flow and financial results, as well as the Company's overall leverage in the following period. We estimate that is likely that in the medium term the Company will be able to restore its coverage ratios levels.
